

AMERICA IS BIG, BUT PROVIDENCE WORKS STRANGELY

Deserting Husband Walks
Into Court as Wife Is Told
Hopelessness of Search.

TRIED TO RUN AWAY.

But Mother of His Five Children
Simply Waited Patiently and Finally Got Him.

Mrs. Gustie Bagganoff is either a lucky or an unlucky woman, depending on how you look at it. At any rate, she had only been in the country five days when she found the husband who deserted her nine years ago in one of the back assembly districts of Russia.

The woman was in the Lee Avenue Court in Williamsburg yesterday asking for a warrant for her recalcitrant husband. Through the interpreter, she told Magistrate Higgins that she had run away from her in 1897, leaving her with five small children to support. She had been informed that he was somewhere in America and she wanted him arrested right away.

It was explained to her that America is a large, roomy country, and that unless she could locate the tramp more approximately, the policeman might have trouble finding him. Mrs. Bagganoff went away, and although she did not succeed in locating her husband, she was back in court today, patiently waiting for Providence or something to intervene in her case.

Providence or something did intervene. A bearded, middle-aged man marched up to the judge and said:

He was just about saying that he lived at No. 312 Myrtle avenue, and that a neighbor, Samuel Abramson, had seen the eye two weeks ago and raised a fearsome jump, when Mrs. Bagganoff, who had been standing motionless at the rear, emitted a loud shriek. She came tearing through the crowd, threw both arms around the bearded man, and began uttering endearments at the top of a moderate voice.

After two court officers had pried the couple apart, the man, who didn't look happy, owned up that he was Gustie Bagganoff, the long missing one, and that the lady who had looked herself upon his shoulders was his wife.

Magistrate Higgins dropped the eye-punching case right there and ordered the husband to take his wife home and give her a home. Just outside the court-room the husband slipped out of his wife's detaining grasp and ran into a small hotel. Mrs. Bagganoff made no fuss about it. She wrapped her shawl about her and stationed herself at the door and waited. It was a matter of minutes before the husband came forth again and accepted his fate. The reunited pair disappeared in the direction of Myrtle avenue arm in arm.

MACY'S BIG STORE PRODUCT OF 50 YEARS' PROGRESS

Celebrating Its Golden Anniversary With a Full Month of "Sales."

24 ACRES OF SPACE.

Now Manufactures Much of the Product Sold Over Miles of Counters.

Beginning with to-day, Macy's, "the Father of Department Stores," is celebrating its fiftieth anniversary with a month's series of sales. Five thousand employees of the biggest cash establishment in the world are busily engaged in handling the thousands of customers. It promises to be a gala month and a record breaker.

The department store idea was first conceived by Macy's. From a four-story "general store" the establishment now occupies twenty-four acres of floor space. In connection with the celebration the employees will give a ball at Grand Central Palace on next Saturday night.

Rowland H. Macy, a shrewd New England Yankee, founded Macy's in 1858. He was considered an adventurous man when he came down from Haverhill, Mass., and opened a general store near the corner of Sixth avenue and Fourteenth street. His venture prospered from the first, and he gradually conceived the department store idea and worked it out. Since then the department store has become an important factor in the question of feeding and clothing the American people. It has also developed into a great convenience for the women shoppers.

His Own Foreign Buyer.

Mr. Macy himself did the buying of foreign goods, and died in Paris in 1877 while on a business trip abroad. The business was carried on by A. J. La Forge and Robert M. Valentine. Mr. La Forge was connected with the firm only one year, and at his death was replaced by C. B. Webster. The next year Mr. Valentine died, and Mr. Webster was the sole proprietor of Macy's until 1888, when Isidor and Nathan Straus became partners with him. Since the retirement of Mr. Webster in 1888 the firm has been in the hands of the Strauses.

At the time of Mr. Macy's death in 1877 the department store idea had already taken definite form. Macy's had taken in several of the buildings adjacent to the four-story "general store," and was giving employment to about one thousand persons. In 1907 the new building was completed, and the move was made from Fourteenth street to Thirty-fourth street and Broadway. Moving so far uptown was considered to be taking a big risk by the wisecracks, who prophesied no good for the enormous building with its twenty-four acres of floor space, far from the then existing shopping district. Since then the move has been proved to be a far-sighted one. Herald Square has since been the center of the new shopping district. Macy's working force is now 5,000 persons. Ten thousand more in all parts of the world are kept busy making the articles which reach the public through this great artery of trade.

Factories Controlled Abroad.

Macy's controls a glassware factory in Bohemia, cut glass is made here in New York by Macy's. Macy's also controls a porcelain decorating establishment in China, their china is decorated in their own factory in Japan, and more china is decorated in their New York studios. A Macy's handkerchief factory is in operation in Belgium, and other industries in this city, which serve as direct feeders for the big store, are a mattress factory, a dress factory, a coffee roasting plant, a fruit preserving and candy making establishment and a laboratory for the preparation of soap, drugs, medicines and toilet requisites.

Macy's restaurant occupies the greater part of the eighth floor of the new building in Herald Square. National Guard Officers Asked
